

OFF THE BRIDGE

Abrar AlMari

The Client: Off The Bridge is a bike repair shop in Chinatown. The name comes from it's first location that was directly off of the Manhattan Bridge. Google Reviews and the store's Instagram both reflect a positive reaction/appreciation of how straightforward and knowledgeable Qian was, which is a strongpoint of the store. This design takes that position of knowledge to an extreme authoritarianism.

The Theme and Worldbuilding: Orwell's 1984 Ministry

- Doublethink: The naming system of the ministries in the book are the opposite of their actual function. As the Ministry of Truth is in charge of propaganda and the Ministry of Love is in charge of torture; a ministry in charge of repair would therefore be named the opposite. Thus, the name "The Ministry of Destruction".
- Totalitarianism: The banner and additional medias are all meant to convey the overwhelming totalitarianism of Orwell's 1984 through a bold typeface and language with an indoctrination leaning.
- Big Brother Figure: One of the most central and visual figures in 1984, an equally centric visual figure would work well within the theme of the repair shop as this mini self-contained Orwellian world; that needs its own Big Brother. Which in this context would be the owner/manager as this supreme authority.

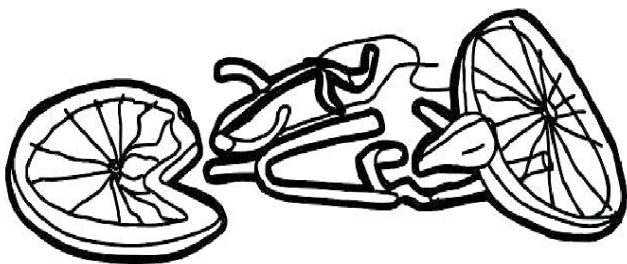

The Logo:

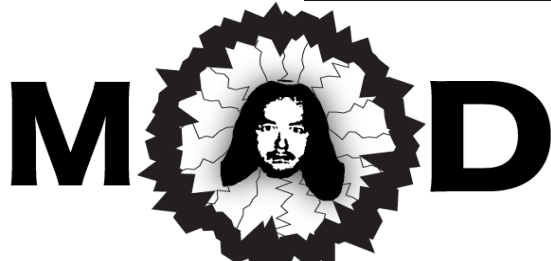

- Referencing the big brother imagery that is so central to Orwell's 1984.
- The distorted bike wheel in the background for that central theme of bicycles and to create a recognizable icon that can be used in different designs.

THE MANIFESTO

EVERY ACT OF CREATION IS FIRST AN ACT OF DESTRUCTION

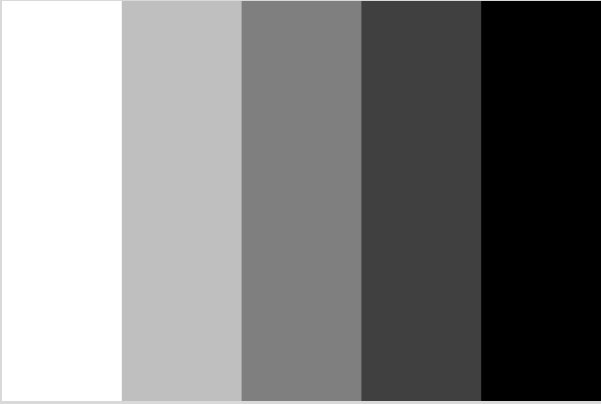

THE MINISTRY OF DESTRUCTION WANTS YOU
TO EXERCISE YOUR RIGHT TO REPAIR

GET MORE OUT OF LIFE!
GO OUT AND WRECK YOUR BIKE!

Colors:

Style: graphic and bold, some inspirations such as the ignorant tattoo style, and the architecture style of Brutalism

The Store-front Banner:

THE MINISTRY OF DESTRUCTION

Merchandising design

